Phelophepa means “Good, clean health” in Tswana and Sotho dialects....and is pronounced (pay•lo•pe•pa)

The Phelophepa Health Care Train, established in 1994, initially operated with only three eye clinic coaches. By 1995, recognizing the need for a wider primary health care base it expanded services to include more comprehensive optometry, dental and psychological care.

Now, the Phelophepa has grown from three cars to an impressive 18-car train delivering primary health care, education and outreach programs to impoverished rural areas of South Africa.

With over 40 permanent staff and numerous volunteers, the train is more than a mobile hospital, it provides out-reach and educational programs and has thus far reached 23.5 million people since it rolled out in 1994, which makes it the worlds biggest mobile clinic.

Phelophepa brings support and empowerment to so many, in areas where there is one doctor for every 5000 people, they call it the Train of Hope.
